- the 1970s, the U.S. economy was in a period of rapid growth, and the demand for labor was high. This led to a significant increase in the number of immigrants entering the country, particularly from Latin America and Asia. The U.S. government implemented policies to attract foreign investment and technology, which further stimulated economic growth. However, the rapid increase in immigration also led to concerns about the impact on the domestic labor market and social services. The U.S. government responded by implementing various immigration control measures, including the Immigration and Nationality Act of 1965, which established a system of quotas for different countries.
