Summary

Bailey provided background information on the National Register for Historic Places nomination and the Landmarks Commission’s review as part of the Certified Local Government process. The nomination had previously been approved in 2019, and the commission is now reviewing a boundary decrease for the nomination. On the site, two noncontributing resources are now demolished, and one contributing resource remains. The areas of significance and period of significance are not changing, there is only a proposed change in boundary.

There was brief discussion of the changes to the original nomination, and the commission supported the proposed boundary decrease for the National Register nomination.
