Hey John, I am writing about the parking lot extension which I will assume means building the parking lot to the fence. I feel like we deal with enough noise as it is. The bass is still loud, there are tons of people outside smoking and people going to and from their cars all night long. People who are outside scream and yell and when it is bar time, turn their music up in their cars and honk their horns as they are pulling out of the parking lot. We also have a lot of people going in between the house and the fence to urinate as well and have had issues with people going onto the front porch last summer. If the parking lot is built up to the fence, we will have people literally right outside our bedroom window. We already can not have our windows open at night in the summer because of the noise. We have to run the air conditioner when it's not needed so we can sleep in the summer. No one would be able to sleep until after bar time if the parking lot is extended because there is nothing loud enough to block that noise. Plus the little bit of privacy besides the fence which really doesn't block the parking lot view from our house is the few trees that were not cut down. These trees would have to be removed in order to extend the parking lot so there would be NO privacy from the bars parking lot and smoking area. We have lived here for 7 years and will be moving because of the noise from the bar and can only imagine what the noise will be like for future tenants if the parking lot is extended into the yard.
Thanks Andrea
