Dear Ann,

It was a pleasure to meet with you yesterday afternoon, on the spot, to speak about old and historic buildings in the city of Madison, and those on the UW-Madison campus.

I hope that many more citizens, namely developers and planners of new buildings, will listen to you more and take your advice on how to save the old while growing the city with new infrastructure.

I forgot to ask yesterday, when old buildings are reviewed by the city and also your Landmarks group, once approval for demolition, does your department or anyone in the city get photographs taken especially the exterior views of the buildings, homes, stores?? If so, where do they get archived, and were such pictures taken of the Orton Park home that you told me about that got torn down recently?

Again, very nice to meet with you yesterday.

PS---As for the 150-year-old-plus home at 125 North Bedford Street, last week the barely attended neighborhood group approved the plans by homeowner Todd Meinholtz to go to the next level, which is either the Plan Commission or UDC.....could you, in a letter for Nan Fey and/or Alan Martin to read before either or both committees so let them know the house itself is not historic, but the group of homes in that area of North Bedford and West Miffitin/West Dayton area of value together as a group....could you send some message of that affect for the committees to read or hear if Nan or Alan would read such correspondence from you? I heard a date of Oct. 15 is noted, not sure what that committee would be and if this project would be on the agenda...can you check to see and send them a letter?
