I have heard that St. Bernard's wants to put the "construction" lights back up on their bell tower. I have sent pictures with and without the lights . I can't believe anyone would think it looks better with these lights. You can see from the night time picture how the lights are glaring, diminishing the night sky. The lights would look better on a shed. They don't belong on a beautiful church. Surely a landmark building deserves better than what looks like construction cast offs.

Thank you for your time.

Please reconsider the lights on the tower. What ever there was recently was terrible. I thought that an airplane was landing as I drove on Hudson towards Atwood. I can't imagine living directly across the street. If whoever thinks there needs to be lights, maybe they should contact a different company. Another suggestion would be to contact whoever does Olbrich's light. They are much more appealing.

Dear Amy,

I have heard the lights on the tower of St Bernard's church might be re-installed and that the landmark commission will meet to discuss this issue. I am not a member of St Bernard's but I do live one block directly south of the church at the corner of Sommers and Hudson. When the lights were originally installed I wasn't sure what the purpose was. In my opinion they were too high to be for security. And they were so bright they were not very pleasing.

I hope the commission can work with the church to find a pleasing and secure solution.

Thank you,

Joanne Malvik
