

Arts and Culture

New downtown Madison public art project creates outdoor art gallery

Downtown Doors showcases 27 local artists

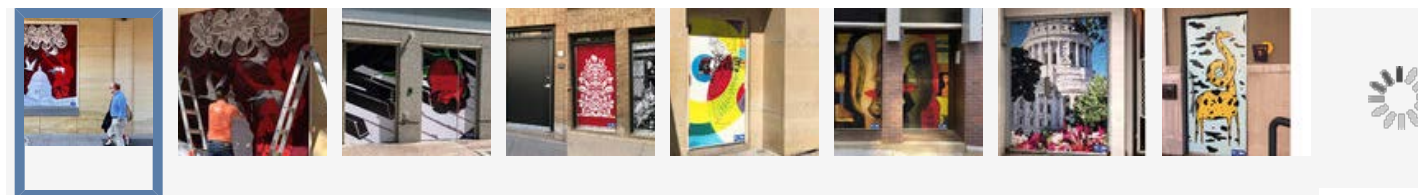

By: Maija Inveiss

Posted: May 08, 2019 09:52 AM CDT Updated: May 08, 2019 02:51 PM CDT

Decorated doors are popping up throughout downtown through Downtown Doors. The project features fine artists and urban artists. This piece was created by FORNOW.

The doc

In an effort to re-imagine hidden and secondary doors on State Street and in downtown, the Central Business Improvement District and the city of Madison launched a new public art project called Downtown Doors.

According to a release, the Downtown Doors project showcases 25 local artists at more than 25 locations across downtown Madison in an effort to spotlight the city's art community.

Madison Art Commission's BLINK temporary art program and the Room Tax Commission helped support the projects, along with downtown property owners, who sponsored doors to help pay for a portion of installation costs.

Similar to last year's Bucky on Parade, there will be both digital and print guides to help the community find all locations throughout the city. Guides can be found at the Downtown Madison Visitor Center by Lisa Link Peace Park or at the Visitor Booth at the top of State Street. Online maps can also be found on its website.

All of the doors will remain up for approximately two years.

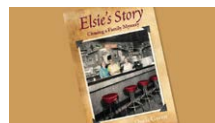

More Arts & Culture

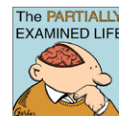

ThatsLife ready for first show post accident

Collaborative art exhibit aims to unite women against hate

Spring Green author solves a family mystery in new book

The Partially Examined Life podcast keeps its Madison roots

New downtown Madison public art project creates outdoor art gallery

By [Name]

Public art installation in downtown Madison.

The Madison Public Health Department is proud to announce a new downtown Madison public art project. This project will create an outdoor art gallery in the heart of the city, featuring works by local artists. The art will be displayed in a public space, providing a unique opportunity for the community to engage with art in their daily lives.

The project is a collaboration between the Madison Public Health Department and local artists. The art will be displayed in a public space, providing a unique opportunity for the community to engage with art in their daily lives.

- The Madison Public Health Department is proud to announce a new downtown Madison public art project.
- This project will create an outdoor art gallery in the heart of the city, featuring works by local artists.
- The art will be displayed in a public space, providing a unique opportunity for the community to engage with art in their daily lives.

For more information, please contact the Madison Public Health Department at [Phone Number].

