When the Bascom Hill Historic District was listed in 1974, it did not include a full inventory of resources contained within its boundaries. This amendment establishes an inventory of all current resources of sufficient size and scale within the listed boundaries, provides their contributing and non-contributing status, and discusses major resources not discussed in the original nomination.

Brief Description

The Bascom Hill Historic District encompasses 34 resources. The 1974 National Register nomination for the district specifies the period of significance as 1851-1969, beginning with the execution of the plan for "College Hill" and the construction of North Hall, and extending through the construction of the latest contributing building, Helen C. White Hall. Therefore, all those resources that were constructed during the period of significance, and that retain sufficient integrity to convey their original association as college buildings, are considered contributing elements in the Bascom Hill Historic District. In the original nomination, the University Club, the Lake Lab and the Sanitary Engineering and Pumping Station (the Hydraulics Laboratory) were considered for replacement and received non-contributing status in the official count. However, only the Lake Lab has been altered since the original nomination and continues to be considered non-contributing. The University Club and the Hydraulics Lab retain a high degree of integrity and have long been considered contributing resources to the historic district. The new count reflects this status. The district contains 28 contributing resources and six non-contributing resources. In addition, present throughout the district are numerous resources that are too small to count, such as markers, memorial boulders, plaques, planters, and benches.

Several of the contributing resources in the district were not discussed in the original nomination of the district, in the report "Bascom Hill Historic District" (an addendum to the original National Register nomination dated April 30, 1974), or in individual nominations. Those that merit additional description are detailed below.

Bascom Mall, planned as “College Hill” in 1850, is partially described in the report, “Bascom Hill Historic District.” The plan, prepared by the Board of Regents Building Committee, specified a “main edifice, fronting towards the capitol” at the top of the hill, with a broad “avenue, two hundred and forty feet wide...bordered by double rows of trees.” A roadway and two dormitories (four in all) were proposed for either side of the avenue.<sup>5</sup> As the university grew, the “avenue” was maintained with few changes. By 1875, the roadways had become walkways.<sup>6</sup> By 1890, a roadway had been constructed in front of Bascom Hall (then called “University Hall”), joining Lathrop Drive (behind the present location of Birge Hall) to Observatory Drive.<sup>7</sup> Sometime between 1906 and 1910, a sidewalk was installed across the quadrangle, between North and South Halls.<sup>8</sup> In 1920, University Hall was renamed “Bascom Hall.” Since that time, the quadrangle has been known as “Bascom Hill.” The roadway that ran in front of Bascom Hall appears to have been open until at least 1941.<sup>9</sup>

The Lincoln Statue (1909) is the lone contributing object on the Bascom Mall. Initially, the statue was erected farther down the hill. In 1918, the terrace and exedra on which the statue sits was constructed, and the statue was moved to its present location. Nearby are two markers that identify the graves of Samuel Warren (1838) and William Nelson (1837), two men who died while Madison’s Wisconsin Territorial Capitol was being constructed.

The Memorial Union Terrace was primarily designed by Charlotte Peabody, who was then working in the office of the State Architect, Arthur Peabody (her father). Charlotte had graduated from the University of Wisconsin in 1921, and then completed a three-year course of study at the Cambridge (Massachusetts) School of Domestic Architecture and Landscape Architecture. The Cambridge School offered professional training to women, and had been established by two professors from Harvard University (which did not admit women at that time). The Union Theatre wing, finished in 1939, included an addition to the terrace along its east and north (overlooking the lake) sides. In 1964, the flagstones were replaced with the existing pavement. In 1967, nationally-prominent landscape architects Dan Kiley and Peter Ker Walker designed the Lakeshore Rehabilitation structure, which created a concrete walkway along the shore, with steps descending to the water. Finished in 1969, this resource incorporates a mooring area and dock (north of the University of Wisconsin Armory and Gymnasium). The Terrace was expanded toward the lake in 1986-87, and includes a small stage. There are two markers on the site: the Class of 1936 memorial plaque and a historical marker adjacent to the Union Theater. Near the Terrace, abutting the northeast corner of Helen C. White Hall, stands the Lake Safety Tower, a more recent addition to the White Hall.

Library Mall was constructed in 1956-58, according to plans prepared by William Longenecker, then director of the University of Wisconsin Arboretum. His design was primarily a planting plan, but featured a formal layout with diagonal pathways that may have been inspired by earlier ideas. Several plans for the space in front of the State Historical Society had been presented over the years, beginning with one by O.C. Simonds (1901), another by Laird and Cret (1908), and a third by William J. Hagenah (1945). None of the earlier plans was carried out. There is one contributing object set in the center of Library Mall: the Library Mall Hagenah Fountain (1958, designed by William J. Hagenah). Resources that are present, but too small to count, include concrete benches, a flagpole and a historical marker (the latter two located close to the State Historical Society).

John Muir Park was created in 1959 in an area formerly referred to as Bascom Woods. The site was formally dedicated in 1964.<sup>10</sup> In addition to the recently erected Robert E Gard Storytellers' Circle (2010, NC), the park contains numerous resources that are too small to count. Among these are the Muir Knoll boulder (1918), the Rasmus Anderson boulder (1937), the Thomas Brittingham runestone (1963), a concrete bench, and four small stone markers: Class of 1889; Class of 1891; Class of 1893; and Class of 1897.

The Social Sciences Plaza is really a part of the William H. Sewell Social Sciences Building, which is not in the Bascom Hill Historic District. However, the plaza is included within the boundaries of the district, and is therefore counted as a contributing site. The 85 foot Carillon Tower (1934-35), designed by Arthur Peabody, is located in the plaza, although it predates the plaza. Another resource that predates the plaza is the Blackhawk boulder (1913), set in a planter. The Blackhawk boulder is too small to count, as are the planters and concrete benches placed around the plaza.

The Pedestrian Bridge over Park Street was constructed in 1968. This concrete arch structure crosses from the Humanities Building to the west walkway that climbs Bascom Mall. It should also be noted that another pedestrian bridge crosses from the Humanities Building to Vilas Hall over University Avenue. Erected c. 1972, this concrete arch bridge is only partially in the district, and so is not included in the count.

<sup>10</sup> Two structures have been removed since the Bascom Hill Historic District was listed. These were the Class of 1961 Overlook (designed by Richard Tipple, 1962), and the cistern, erected in 1915 to provide water for the pumping station below.

The National Register nomination for the Bascom Hill Historic District (1974) states:

[T]he Bascom Hill Historic District represents the most historic cluster of institutional buildings in Wisconsin. Even beyond this it is a sensitive mix of urban and natural spaces comprising a memorable and coherent whole significant in itself. The buildings themselves are of major statewide significance, but together in their interrelationships and their relation to “College Hill” and Madison’s natural environment they become part of the greater identity that is the Bascom Hill Historic District.<sup>11</sup>

The highly intact buildings, structures and sites in the district continue to retain those qualities for which they were listed nearly 40 years ago.
