Alders,

I am writing in support of Cafe CODA. As a black-owned event space/concert venue (along with the newly opened Hayes Place), CODA plays a vital and oversized role in providing a variety of entertainment options for all residents of Madison. This includes hosting shows during the recent Madison Jazz Festival.

For over a decade, Urban Community Arts Network has been working to address inequities within our music scene. This includes the Task Force on Equity in Music and Entertainment and its final report, which was accepted by a previous Council (Legistar #53956). UCAN's efforts have coalesced into Greater Madison Music City (with studies funded by Room Tax Commission), which is a broad coalition of artists, promoters, venues, educators, music production companies, and audience members.

As chair of the Economic Impact committee of GMMC, I commend Cafe CODA as both a place where artists are compensated for sharing their talents as well as for the community formed there, specifically around jazz, the most American of artforms.

I hope to see you at Mad Lit some time this summer, which kicks off this Friday at the top of State Street!

Thank you for your time,

Nick Pjevach
