

SEARCH BLOG | FLAG BLOG | Next Blog>Create Blog | Sign In

LETTER FROM HERE

WHERE IS HERE? EVERYWHERE. NOWHERE. OUT THERE.

THURSDAY, MARCH 26, 2009

Big Bird in Madison's Law Park

There's some kind of giant bird in Law Park, west of Monona Terrace. It's not a Great Blue Heron, not a Sandhill Crane, not even a Canada goose. It's Seabird, a kinetic metal sculpture that moves in the wind, created by Madison artist Kent Hutchison. Isthmus commented last November when the sculpture went up:

Madison claims very few kinetic sculptures, so we've got our eyes wide open ready to see what this recent UW-Steven's Point graduate did with a little wind, some steel, and ball bearings. Seabird, is created in homage to lakefront waterfowl that live in Wisconsin and often make Monona's shores in Law Park their temporary resting ground.

Seabird is just west of Timekeeper, the abstract sculpture by Robert

ABOUT ME

MADISON GUY
MADISON, WISCONSIN,
UNITED STATES

[VIEW MY COMPLETE
PROFILE](#)

PREVIOUS POSTS

Why did the chicken cross the road?

Tulip time lapse sequence update

Bubble that broke and went splat

A sunset visit to Allen Centennial Gardens in the ...

La Nina has been kinder to Madison this year than ...

Happy Vernal Equinox

[Spring is near and so are the Sandhill
Cranes](#)

Floating somewhere between illusion and reality on...

[When the space station flies over
Madison, you pho...](#)

Looking for spring greenery on a sunny March after...

Site Feed

» Blogs that link here

Curtis that went up in 1983, and which celebrated its under-appreciated 25th anniversary last year. In contrast, Seabird is designed to be temporary. It's one of the Madison Arts Commission's BLINK temporary public art projects, and it comes down next November.

 Technorati

POSTED BY MADISON GUY AT 12:24 PM

0 COMMENTS:

POST A COMMENT

LINKS TO THIS POST:

CREATE A LINK<< Home