Allied Neighborhood a Desert For Healthy Food

Key facts:

- Food deserts are geographic areas where access to affordable, healthy food options such as fresh produce is limited or nonexistent because grocery stores are too far away.
- About 23.5 million people live in food deserts. Nearly half of them are also low-income.
- Approximately 2.3 million people (2.2% of all US households) live in low-income, rural areas that are more than 10 miles from a supermarket.
- Residents living in food deserts also have difficulty finding foods that are culturally relevant and that meet their dietary restrictions.
- The Allied neighborhood has not had a grocery store since 2009.
