Just to add another item. The Renewal by Andersen window is also built with a real wood interior, and we do not have delamination issues with the Fibrex.

Thank you,

Kurt,

I was talking with Jayne earlier and here's where I'm at: you've provided me pictures of the horns, but I need to know how you're attaching them to the windows. The Landmarks Commission's requirement was sashes be added to the windows with specifications to be approved by staff, so I need some sort of specification for how you're going to accomplish this.

I have concerns about how wood is going to stay attached to a pvc window (is that the material of the sashes?). I think that the contraction of the wood vs. the pvc will create problems. Are you talking about mechanical fastening? Epoxy? Maintaining these horns on the windows is a requirement of the approval, so if they fall off, the property owner will be required to reinstall. The easiest solution is a window with the horns already installed. If you are wanting to continue to explore the option of applying the sash horns to the window

Attached are two pictures of the horn to be added to the double hung windows. We will be repainting all of the horns.
