Dear Alders, Plan Commissioners, and Mayor Rhodes-Conway,

As a resident of the east side and home owner in the Marquette Neighborhood, I do not support the zoning changes being proposed.

This change subtracts neighborhood and City review to streamline the approval for certain housing developments, which and I do not believe will serve Madison and solve this issues around increased growth. Neighborhoods are made of the people who live there, and their input- not just their property taxes - should be of equal value.

I am a large supporter of affordable housing, and could not have become a homeowner here on the Isthmus without the subsidies and support provided by Commonwealth Development. I have also lived in the Carbon apartment building and qualified for a lower income apartment my family needed at the time as we resettled into Madison and my husband was looking for work. Affordable housing is not something I just support, I've needed it and lived in it for most of my last 15 years in Madison.

But Madison is growing fast, and the increased density in the Isthmus corridor and the lack of affordability, plus the environmental challenge of increased density in a zone prone to flooding is a huge concern. We need to grow smarter, not just faster as these zoning changes would pave the way towards...

Thank you,
Amie Heeter of 229 Merry St

Dear Plan Commission:

I am a homeowner, real estate investor, local business owner, parent, spouse, and Madison resident for 12 years.

PLEASE change the zoning code to allow for more mixed use, and density. Please also consider creating pathways to homeownership for those pushed out of the insane market we are currently experiencing. If you allow more density in neighborhoods, please make sure to include affordable housing.

Thank you!

Good Morning,

I live in Middleton but am a resident of Madison. I would like to urge you to keep the provision in for requiring neighborhood input into a development. The city and all of the people are not the ones living in the neighborhoods that the development will go into. The people that live around it should have a place to express their views and actually be heard. I moved away from a large city into a suburban housing development. I do not want to live next to a skyscraper. But with what you are proposing if a person wanted to put in one I would have no choice but to accept it. Please vote to keep neighborhood involvement. Thank you.

Regards,

Dear Plan Commission Members,

I write to you in strong support of the proposed changes to increase the allowable densities and adjust conditional use thresholds in many areas of the city in order to ease and expand the development of multifamily and denser housing. This is a much needed change, and although I do not believe it goes far enough, it is a good step for the city to take.

I have lived in Tenny Lapham for more than 15 years, and I live here because it is easy to walk and bike to destinations or all types. However, despite the recent boom in apartments in my neighborhood, there has not been enough smaller-scale development to keep pace with housing demand. The city should be actively taking steps to increase density throughout Madison, but particularly in the neighborhoods between Milwaukee Street and Midvale Boulevard - the true core of the city. This development can help us become a community that is more equitable, diverse, and respond to the climate crisis facing us.

This proposal is a step in the right direction, and I urge you to support it.

Thank you,
Kevin Luecke

Thank you, Marsha, for getting a Zoom meeting together for this evening, March 17, 2021, to discuss proposed Missing Middle Housing Ordinance changes for our neighborhood.

We appreciate your diligence on so many issues affecting our neighborhood.

Regarding the issues related to the proposed zoning changes and the Plan Commission Meeting on Monday, March 22, 2021, we ask:

How were residents notified about this meeting to discuss something as important as housing ordinances?

When were neighborhood residents notified of this meeting?

What are the needs and purposes of increased density in our specific neighborhood and two adjoining neighborhoods?

What research documents such needs?

What are the potential impacts of increased density in our neighborhood? How will those be addressed and proposals shared with neighborhood residents?

What other city neighborhoods are being/have been considered for such increases in density? Why or why not?

We simply cannot believe that the City of Madison and its Plan Department would act on important ordinances proposing to increase allowable densities and decrease conditional use thresholds without broad neighborhood review and input.

As 30+ year residents of Morrison Street in the Marquette Neighborhood, we have participated in exploring and responding to many important neighborhood issues through clear notification and open meetings. Although there have been differences of opinion among a variety of groups, we have always felt that issues were informed by the input gathered at such meetings before official decisions were made.

Thus, we implore you to stop plans to make these changes until neighbors have been duly notified of the answers to the questions listed above and broad input from the neighborhood has been invited, heard and addressed.

Thank you for listening to our concerns.

We look forward to hearing from the Plan Commission staff through you about the answers to the questions listed above.

Respectfully Submitted,

Dear Plan Commission,

It is my understanding that the City is embracing the possibility of changing the rules for development on the Isthmus, in particular.

While I'm clearly no expert on these issues, I have been living in Madison since 1973 and in various locations on the "Near East Side" since 1978. I purchased a small house there in 1990 for $69,000.

It would seem obvious, given the logic of capital accumulation, that giving the developer businesses a freer hand along the reduction of community and neighborhood input, we will see more development of market-based properties and not affordable working class housing. The class and racial divides within the Madison community would likely be exacerbated by these proposed changes, not lessened – although I know some who are proposing these changes are well-intended.

They should go back to the drawing board. To conclude, there is no guarantee that more affordable working class housing will be built in our neighborhood with these changes; in fact the opposite will occur to the detriment of our City – as folks of lesser financial means are pushed further to the periphery and accelerating the gentrification process on the isthmus.

Thank you for the opportunity to provide these "two cents".

Dear Mayor Rhodes-Conway, Alders, and Plan Commissioners,

I do not support the zoning changes currently proposed by Planning.

The proposal removes neighborhood and City review in order to streamline the approval process for certain developments. Citizen participation isn't an impediment – it's an opportunity for the community and developers to create better projects by working together. In his introductory letter for the Planning Department's Participating in the Development Process: A Best Practices Guide for Developers, Neighborhoods and Policymakers, our former Mayor David Cieslewicz recognized this: "One of the reasons we have this vibrant mix of places is because of our tradition of a caring and involved citizenry and development community. The City understands the importance and benefit of having a healthy community dialogue about the future of our built environment."

Neighborhood input can be crucial to good development no matter its size. Neighbors can help ensure that infill relates well to the streetscape and surrounding uses of the space. This has been especially important, for example, when infill is situated next to a public resource such as a park and our public ROW's.

A second major concern I have is about balancing increased density with the environmental challenges we face in Madison, and how this relates to real affordability.

The proposed zoning changes support additional infill for areas in our City that are desirable places to live. These places – including my own near-east neighborhood – are on a strip of mostly flat land, in a former wetland, between lakes, with a high water table, and are prone to flooding. As Madison pursues the important goal of affordable, equitable housing, we need to keep the environmental needs of our isthmus equally in view. Long-term, we can't meet the first need without meeting the second.

I believe more ways to create affordable housing in Madison, and in my neighborhood, is important. I bought my home when the neighborhood was much more affordable. As a single woman (at least the second time I bought it), affordability was and continues to be a focus for me. I know there are many more who also need a chance to find and have a home. Many also want affordable options to age in place in our community.

Our neighborhood has been a focus of quite a bit of urban infill. Bill Fruhling with the City of Madison Planning Department is quoted in an article as saying, "...with major investment pouring into E. Washington and parts of the East Side, city staff have been anticipating where the next push might take place." The article specifically focused on the Yahara River Corridor, but the Corridor is a part of a bigger picture.

Part of the bigger picture is, with all that building, our neighborhood has become increasingly expensive. Also in the picture is the need to balance environmental concerns – needs, really – with a desire to build more. It's easy to design Nature out of a built environment, especially in the isthmus where space is so tight. Many cities and downtowns face that dilemma, but an isthmus presents a special challenge.

I've been looking at all kinds of documents about building. I came across this comment in a Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) publication regarding building and affordability: "Experience has shown that flat land creates many difficulties that are costly to overcome. Inadequate run-off of surface water often causes ground saturation which results in a high water table adversely affecting house foundations, basements, pavements and individuals' water-supply and sewage disposal systems." That's certainly a sentence that gets my attention. I, like so many in my neighborhood, have an older home (1890s) with a field stone foundation, and I value my water supply and sewage disposal system.

Affordability is about many things. Access to housing is one. But long-term affordability is also about sensible design for cities that considers environmental challenges alongside the need for infill. For example, cities need to meaningfully design for the urban heat island effect. Neighborhoods with a higher proportion of buildings and streets get warmer and stay warmer at night. As the climate changes, many cities are experiencing deadly heat waves. Stormwater is also warmed by traveling over roofs and pavement, before entering our lakes and the Yahara River, and warmer water makes them more prone to deadly blue-green algae. These are challenges that, if not addressed, come with a very real cost.

Likewise, the floods we experienced not too many years ago in our City should be a serious wake-up call that we need to balance infill with our environmental challenges. Thinking back to the quote from HUD, one of the reasons that Engineering often does not support larger infiltration strategies for stormwater in our isthmus neighborhood is because of our high water table. Sensible design should look at infiltration and retention as options. Many cities have moved forward with retention strategies, including ones that prioritize canopy trees: an affordable, beautiful, sensible strategy that enhances the built environment. A successful urban canopy needs us to plan for space for them to grow and thrive.

Across the country and here in Madison, serious environmental challenges are pushing a lot of people up against a pretty hard wall. As we look at how we use the space we have, the proposed zoning changes need to address these challenges and prioritize sensible design for our City and our neighborhood. We also need to encourage, not limit, neighborhood involvement to make every development the right fit.

Respectfully,

Anne Walker

Hello,

I am a resident living at 508 Burnt Sienna Drive. I am concerned about the new changes proposed to the conditional use permits that eliminates neighborhood input during the approval process. I am unable to find the link in order to officially register in opposition to these changes, as written. I am not against smart, multi family development in all areas of the city, however, I think it is vitally important to keep the public informed of upcoming proposals so that we can adequately assess impacts to the neighborhood and have a chance to support or oppose such development.

Sincerely,

Matt McGrady
